The Toronto News says that the reason so many Northwest railway charters are being

RESERVED QUARTERS. Probably the greatest evil of the present land p 'cy in th Northwest is the system of reserves under which roughly speaking each alternate section throughout the Territories is held closed from settlement, partly on the plea that they must be kept to bonus rail-ways and partly that they may be sold for the benefit of the federal treasury; but as the railways do not materalize and they are never offered for sale they simply lie a dead weight on the efforts of the settlers on the unreserved sections. That the throwing open of these sections is most desirable and in fact necessary if the country is to prosper has long been evident to people acquainted with the facts, and at its late session the Northwest assembly passed a resolution calling upon the interior department to take that course wherever the lands were not required for railroad purposes. It was and is felt that if railways are to be induced to run through unsettled country land must be offered them, if cash cannot be, and the difficult point was how to recon-cile as nearly as possible the throw-ing open of all lands for settlement and the granting of lands as a bonus in aid of railgranting of mana as a bonus in and of rai-ways. Under the present system the odd sections held for the benefit of the federal treasury are turned over to the railway con-pany to be sold for its benefit. The assem-bly asked that instead of reserves in alternolv asked that instead or reserve in attentions at a sections in the hands of the government be so reserved. This would give the railway the same amount of land within a certain distance of the line as the reserve of alternate sections, it would not be asking the government to sacrifice any more directly, it would allow of two free settie on every section, and would bring the railway company's lands at once into market way companys in the sat once into market in the way of pre-emptions for the settlers on the adjoining free homesteads. The only has to the government would be the price of the pre-emptions on the even sections which it might otherwise receive, but it was felt that the more rapid and prosperous settle-ment of the country under this plan would— as in the case of giving up the odd sections as in the case of grain of the sections to free homesteading—more than make up the possible cash loss. The only objection made to this plan is that under it the settion would have to deal with a railroad company instead of with the government for his premight refuse to sell to him, or charge him an exorbitant price. The answer is that it is more probable the railway company would in order to secure settlers be willing to sell its reserved quarters at the price asked by the government, the more so because being in only quarter sections, which is generally there would be less likelihood of selling a quarter section by itself at a good figure than of disposing of it to a homesteader on the adjoining land. Whereas at present, the reserves being in sections, each of which is reserves being in sections, each of which is equal to one or two good farms, the shances of selling to rich non-residents are better than those of selling to mere settlers, and improve by holding on. If it were felt that there was any danger of the railway company taking advantage of the settler, it could easily be arranged either that the company should be compelled to sell to homesteaders at a fixed price and on fixed terms or the government could handle the reserved quarters at a rate to be arreed on reserved quarters at a rate to be agreed on with the company, the proceeds of sales to be handed to the company. If thought advisable a change to this arrangement could be made where land is already granted to railways and has not yet been settled upon. The day when railway companies expected to get eight or ten dollars an arr for their lands is the Northwest is long past. A much more modest price accompanied by settlement would now please them well, and this they can secure under the plan suggested by the seambly. The plan lately suggested by Watson in the house of Commons—reserves of alternate townships—seems to have all the disadvantages of the present system, but on a township instead of on a section scale and therefore would be worse by so much instead of any better. It would certainly favor the introduction of two distinct classes of land occupants, that is large and small ranchers and farmers, so close toto railways and has not yet been settled gether that their interests would have to gether that their interests would have to come in collision, which would be to the injury of both. If the country were all equally good and equally settled no doubt each settled township could support its own school and church, but where the land is broken and only half or quarter of a town ship would be settled both school and church would be permanently lacking, while in all cases road making across the reserved townships would be in all probability but ill attended to, and yet such portions would have to be travelled equally with those in the settled townships. Whatever is to be done with lands granted to railway compan-ies there is no doubt that the lands not granted should be thrown open for settle-ment at once. In this vicinity there are a large number of odd sections still in the hands of the government upon which there would have been settlers years ago had it been p-sible for them to get on, settlers whose presence and labor would to-day be adding to the wealth and business of the district and of the country, but who are not here simply because the government preferred to hold the land vacant, for what purpose has not yet been ravealed. And yet people wonder w y he Northwest does not settle up; why the country does not go
